

COVID-19 Response & Planning

We know that planning for future events is difficult right now. In a recent email from the owner, James Moher, he begins to describe the steps Grit 'N Wit is currently taking to best serve your communities. Those emails will all be reposted here.

When asked when things will open up or return to normal, Dr. Fauci has said repeatedly, "You don't make the timeline, the virus makes the timeline."

To state the obvious, with an unknown timeline planning becomes somewhere between very challenging and impossible. And that's why there is only one thing you need when planning for the fall, an escape plan.

We get it. And that's why at Grit 'N Wit, this escape plan comes in the form of being able to change your date without losing your deposit. Postponing free of cost.

If companies don't give you this option, look for the exit.

Now assuming everything is looking good for the fall, more likely than not, we all are still going to want to adhere to social distancing when possible. And that's the second thing you should be considering when planning.

Fortunately, unlike other activities or events, Grit 'N Wit can be a large scale event and yet still adhere to social distancing. For how that's possible we'll be sending out another email in a few days explaining all.

Thanks!
